

5. The Lost Remote

Genre: Comedy

Age Range: 16-35

Length: 1-2 Minutes

Emotional Themes: Obsession, Frustration, Determination

Scene Description

A person turns their entire house upside down searching for a missing TV remote.

Monologue

I lost the TV remote. At first I wasn't worried. Things get misplaced all the time. Then ten minutes passed.

I checked the couch, under the couch, behind the couch. At one point I started suspecting the couch itself.

How does a remote disappear in a room this small? It has one job. Stay visible.

As the search continued, logic completely left the building. I checked kitchen drawers. Bathroom shelves. Pockets of clothes I hadn't worn in months. Eventually I found myself looking inside the refrigerator.

I don't know why. Desperation creates strange ideas.

Then I entered the detective phase. Standing in the middle of the room, pointing at furniture like I was solving a crime. I retraced my movements. Reconstructed timelines. Questioned witnesses. The witnesses were my family members, who were enjoying this way too much.

And after all of that, after turning the entire house upside down, I found the remote.

In the refrigerator.

At that point I didn't celebrate. I just stared at it. Because clearly one of us had problems, and I wasn't completely convinced it was the remote.
