

1.TheProfessional Procrastinator

Genre: Comedy

Age Range: 16-30

Length: 1-2 Minutes

Emotional Themes: Overconfidence, Panic, Self-Delusion

Scene Description

A student explains why waiting until the last possible moment to start assignments is actually a highly advanced strategy.

Monologue

People think procrastination is a weakness. It's not. It's a talent. A lifestyle. A carefully refined discipline that only a few of us truly master. For example, I had three weeks to finish an assignment. Three weeks. Twenty-one days of pure opportunity. Do you know when I started? The night before.

Not because I forgot. No. Because I was strategizing. Pressure creates diamonds, right? And apparently, also regret, panic, and questionable life decisions. The thing is, I function best under stress. At least that's what I tell myself at 2:47 in the morning while questioning every choice I've ever made.

And every single time I finish, I say, "Never again." Every single time, I mean it. Until the next assignment appears. Then suddenly Future Me looks very responsible. Future Me is going to do the research. Future Me is going to make a schedule. Future Me is going to stay organized.

The problem is that Future Me eventually becomes Present Me. And Present Me immediately starts looking for a newer Future Me to dump everything on. It's a flawless system. Terrible results. But flawless system.