Monologue

You know what's funny? People only see the auditions you fail. Not the ones you survive. They see the rejection email. They don't see the courage it took to walk into that room, to stand under those lights, to risk hearing "no" again. Do you know how many times I've heard it? Too many. Too short. Too tall. Too young. Too old. Not what we're looking for. At some point, those words start sounding the same. And yet... I'm still here. Not because I'm fearless. Because I'm stubborn. Because every actor knows something the world forgets. All it takes is one role, one chance, one person who finally sees what you've been carrying all this time. So tomorrow? I'll show up again..

Because the dream doesn't die when someone says no. It dies when you stop knocking. And I'm not done knocking.
