Scene Description

Someone returns to the bench where their relationship began and ends up finding closure.

Monologue

It's smaller than I remember. Funny. I thought this bench was huge. I thought it held the entire world. The first conversation, the first laugh, the first time you held my hand. All happened right here. Back then I thought memories lived in places. That if I came back here often enough... I'd somehow find what I lost. But that's not how it works. The memories came with me. They always did.

And maybe that's okay. Maybe moving on doesn't mean forgetting. Maybe it means carrying the good parts with you and leaving the rest behind.

So... Goodbye. Not to you, To the version of me that's been waiting here all this time.
