An aspiring actor stands alone after a difficult audition and questions whether they belong in the industry.

Monologue

Maybe they're right.Maybe I'm not good enough.Maybe all those polite smiles were just another way of saying no.I know what people think,they think actors are fearless.They see confidence.Applause.Spotlights.They don't see this part,the silence after the audition.The walk back to your car.The voice in your head telling you to quit.I hear that voice all the time.But here's the thing,It never goes away,not after one audition,not after ten.The difference is whether you listen to it.And today?I'm tired.I'm disappointed,but I'm still here.Which means tomorrow...

I'm trying again..
